

In Terre Blanche, the CHWs (left) explain to a grandmother and her daughter that her 3 month old baby has diarrhea because the mother gives her food as well as breast milk. They show her how to make oral rehydration solution, and have a lively conversation with the family and neighbors about the benefits of exclusive breastfeeding.

In the same area, the CHWs find a woman who is having complications late in pregnancy and is supposed to be going to a hospital for help. Much encouragement later she promises to go.

In another part of Terre Blanche, the CHWs have visited this man, who's wife inside has dementia.

For our last visit of the day, we check in on the Ti Foyer, the cooking session led by Madame Mishu. She hosts a twice weekly education and meal-making class with mothers of moderately malnourished kids. She is proud of what they are doing, teaching mothers about locally available foods, healthy nutrition for kids, and hygiene. She makes home visits weekly to check on each family, encouraging them to implement what they've learned. The success rate is high: of the kids who have recovered, none have become malnourished again.

Thank you for partnering with these courageous and hard-working people, as they reach out to their neighbors, keeping mothers and children healthy and building deep roots of resilience for the future.
